BATCHELOR GIRLS' DANCE.

Charming and altogether delightful was the pretty dance held Friday evening in the Glendale Country Club when the batchelor girls of the club entertained its members with their friends.

Artistic as the club parlors have been from time to time they were never more so than on this same evening.

Guests were received in the reception hall which had been transformed into a bower representing an opal; the parlors were decorated, one with white Shasta daisies, smilax and festoons of chiffon, the other with wisteria and ivy, the lights were softly veiled with yellow and throughout the rooms were hung huge Japanese baskets of roses, one especially large one filled with white carnations held place of honor and was generally understood to have been presented to the old maids by one of the old batchelors.

The evening was devoted to dancing, an orchestra being hidden behind a bank of palms and orange blossoms. The entire affair was a thorough success, the credit belonging to the hostesses, who were Miss Emma Williams, Miss Bertha Peterson, Miss Clara Peterson, Miss Eleanor Richards, Miss May Richards, Miss Nell Robb and Miss Lida Robb.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE—OPEN MEETING.

Tuesday evening next the Chamber of Commerce offers an attractive entertainment to the public at Odd Fellows hall. The meeting will be addressed by Major H. Z. Osborne, first vice-president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and a good speaker. Frank Geiger will sing a solo and Miss Shropshire will recite Mr. E. D. Goode will give a talk on railroads, having some information to give out. Everybody is invited.

ORATORICAL CONTEST

Second Contest at High School—An Interesting Event—Dwight Stephenson the Winner

On last Friday evening occurred the second annual oratorical contest of the Glendale Union High school. Preliminary contests had been held in the four classes to select the strongest speaker to compete in the finals. These preliminaries resulted in the choice of Jennie Boring of the Ninth year; Alma Turner of the Tenth year; Harold Story of the Eleventh year, and Dwight Stephenson of the Twelfth year.

Yell masters were chosen, decoration committees were appointed, class songs composed and gala preparations in general were made for the program. Sections of the high school auditorium were set aside by lot for each class wherein decorations could be placed. Considerable class rivalry developed and resulted in the auditorium becoming a veritable bower.

The Ninth grade selected the north side of the room and Purple and Gold were found here in profusion; columns were draped along the outer side of the section while gold and purple hung in festoons from these columns to the wall, making a very artistic pergola effect under which the Freshmen assembled in high glee.

With a "hip, hip," the seniors appeared marching two abreast, the boys and girls wore white shirtwaists and red ties, and carried canes decorated with red and white. Filing into the space reserved for them they were surrounded with draperies of red and white while suspended from the ceiling above floated the banner of '11 and a large "S" made of red balloons.

Hardly were the seniors in place before a bugle blast announced the approach of the Tenth year students. These came an army sixty-five strong, boys and girls decked out in gold and black, each wearing a stocking cap of the same colors. They took their places beneath a dainty canopy of blossoming poppies, while the lights above were made to represent the same colors.

Another bugle call, and in marched the Juniors attired in white with heliotrope ties and a large silk banner in the same colors. They marched to their place beneath a large umbrella of wisteria scattered among which were electric lights.

The whole effect was very dainty and beautiful and all the classes are certainly to be commended for their taste and skill in decorating.

The boys' glee club favored the audience with several selections which with the class songs and a number of "yells" consumed the time devoted to the jollification period. A selection by the mandolin club followed, after which Miss Hazel Everts, last year's winner, was introduced by Mr. Howe as the chairman of the evening, and after the invocation by Rev. C. B. Hatch and another mandolin club selection, the orators held full sway.

The order of the speakers was: Dwight Stephenson, subject, "Prisons and Prison Reform vs. Jennie Boring, subject, "The Perils of Woman's Suffrage." Ralph Story, subject, "Pax Vobiscum," (peace be with you). Alma Turner, subject, "Immigration."

All of the orations were excellent and splendidly delivered.

With flowers distributed, the twenty-dollar gold piece in the possession of the happy winner and congratulations passed, the second annual oratorical contest passed into history.

P. E. O.

The members of Chapter L had a very interesting and profitable meeting on Monday, April 24, at the home of Mrs. Bernice Williams, Mrs. Josephine Bryant presiding. Following the regular business, a very fine program was given by the leader, Mrs. May Lee and her assistants. Subject, "The Counties of California." A map drawn and presented by Miss Elizabeth Byrkit was such enjoyed. An all-day meeting will be held on May 8, at the home of Mrs. Pearl Tower, 885 Damasco.

CLOVER LAWN POULTRY YARDS

An Interesting Place—A Business Carried on Successfully and by System

A call at the Clover Lawn Chicken Farm of C. M. Walton on Central avenue disclosed the fact that this business which Mr. Walton has built up here, is in a thriving condition. He has about 1700 laying hens of the White Leghorn breed and for some time past, although decreasing just now, the output has been in the neighborhood of a thousand eggs daily. But at present the production of eggs seems to be a secondary consideration for ten brooders with a capacity of 600 eggs each are filled with eggs and the chicks are breaking the shells in some of them almost daily, the average daily hatch being something like 200, or 1200 a week. Mr. Walton formerly shipped a great many eggs for incubating, but this season he has turned his attention to the hatching business and is making a great success of it, many of his patrons preferring the young chicks to the chances of getting a good hatch themselves, for now as always the count of chickens before they are hatched is mighty uncertain business even when the eggs are the best that can be obtained, as is the product of the Clover Lawn plant, for the proprietor has devoted a great deal of intelligent effort to getting the chicken business down to a science and has had wonderful success. The chicks are shipped to Southern California and Arizona points by express in lots of about thirty, and go through all right. They are usually shipped within twenty-four hours of hatching, as they stand it better than later, after they begin to require more feeding.

Mr. Walton has the wisdom to acknowledge that he makes mistakes occasionally, and to correct them. When we visited the place a year or more ago one of the unique features of the brooder establishment was an automatic scheme for supplying water to the young chicks by means of a pipe; now he finds that this invention does not give as good satisfaction as the old plan of small open dishes in each pen and so he has gone back to first principles. Last year he built a new brooder house with some new wrinkles that were supposed to be improvements on old methods and now he sees that the old house has advantages which the more modern one does not posess, and he will transfer many of the chicks to the old establishment. One of the most ingenious inventions of Mr. Walton is an automatic device by which all the lamps for the incubators are supplied with oil, a pipe running a small tank to all the lamps, the supply of oil being regulated to a nicety by a ball valve. The manner in which the poultry business is carried on by Mr. Walton demonstrates the value of system; all the work is done by one man and himself, and just now he complains that he is not sufficiently busy, while an inspection of the plant shows that everything is kept scrupulously clean and the place instead of being a detriment to the community in which it is located, is justly looked upon as an asset.

PRIZES TO BE GIVEN IN WALTZ.

We were informed by the managers of the dance to be given in Knights of Pythias hall next Monday evening, that the features of the evening will be the prize waltz. Two prizes will be given, one to the best lady waltzer and one to the best gentleman waltzer. Each of the prizes will be worth five dollars. The stickpin which will be the gentleman's prize may be seen in Guernsey's window on Fourth street; the lady's prize will be millinery to the extent of five dollars at Mrs. C. H. Eudemiller's store on Brand boulevard.

REAL ESTATE AND BUILDING

Real estate dealers generally express an optimistic opinion this week as to conditions in their line. There is certainly a decided improvement over last week, as for a fortnight inquiries have not been as numerous as is naturally expected at this season, but now the tide seems to be coming in again. The demand seems to be for acreage among the class of buyers whose headquarters are in Los Angeles, and for that reason the call for lots is not so noticeable as it was some time ago.

Mr. Asa Fanset has sold his eleven-acre orange ranch and home on Fourth street east of Verdugo Road to J. Lewis McOmber of El Paso, Ill. The price paid is $25,000 and Mr. Fanset takes as part payment the house on Fifth street near Adams which was built a year or two ago by Mr. Henry Johnson. The property sold by Mr. Fanset is highly improved, buildings and orchard being in first class condition. Mr. McOmber and family will occupy it at once. The sales were made by Mr. A. T. Varney.

E. H. Owen reports the sale of house and lot on Cherry street belonging to H. D. Decker to Peter Christensen who had moved into it with his family.

The same agent has sold a lot in the Verdugo Canon Tract, containing about an acre to Mr. Glaston, an instructor in the Los Angeles high school, for $2700. He expects to build.

Ben Kline, the Brand boulevard shoemaker, is building himself a $1600 home on Kenwood street between Third and Fourth, a six-room cottage.

Peter L. Ferry has traded a house and lot on West Third street for forty acres of oak timber land in Missouri, the new owner being C. W. Berry, who occupies the premises with his family.

Mary E. Larkin and Josephine Larkin have bought through the agency of Chandler and Lawson a house and lot on Fairview avenue which they will occupy at once. They come here from Philadelphia.

C. A. Ruby sold his home place on Adams street between Seventh and Ninth streets, this week to M. W. Tilden of Los Angeles, the price received reported as being $11,500. The sale includes the property and a good house of five rooms. The place is planted to oranges. Mr. Tilden and family took possession of the place this week.

MID-MAY FESTIVAL

To be Held Thursday, May 18th—Success Assured and Will be Great Event

At a meeting of the various committees held last Tuesday evening at the office of Mr. C. O. Pulliam, reports were received which settled the financial aspect of the Mid-May Festival and assured the success of that affair. Already there is as much money in sight as was used for the day last year and the canvass for funds is not completed. The committee when it got down to hard work found that almost every business concern in town was ready to contribute to the fund for our annual festival and the matter is at the present time in a most satisfactory shape.

The wishes of the storekeepers in regard to changing the day from Saturday to Thursday, was the impelling force which led the committee to decide to have a mid-week holiday instead of having it on Saturday. The program has not been completed, but it has been decided that every feature of it will take place in Glendale except the dance in the evening at Verdugo Park. Probably the barbecue will be held on the grounds where it was last season, on Fourth street. The ball game will be on the high school grounds. Invitations have been given Hon. Lee Gates, Mattison B. Jones, Esq., and Rev. Henry, to deliver addresses. Citizens are requested to plan for a holiday on the 18th, to decorate their homes for the occasion and be prepared to display their hospitality.

GLENDALE, CAL., MAY 5, 1911

Governor Johnson has signed the bill by which territory hereafter annexed to Los Angeles will have to bear its proportion of the indebtedness of that city, which now amounts to about $100 per capita. And still there are people who want to get in and help Los Angeles bear that burden. To such philanthropists we commend that stalwart journalistic kicker, the Wilmington Journal. In a recent issue we find this:

"Only for the vastness of Wilmington's natural resources this city after consolidation would never have been heard from again, but on the theory that misery loves company the people of this city now say to the people of South Pasadena: 'Come on in—the water's fine.'"

A city that is good enough to live in is good enough to spend your money in. This old saw, accentuated by modern economic conditions, is especially applicable here. The merchants here are hard hit by the Los Angeles "bundle brigade," but, through them, every citizen suffers in a greater or less degree. Every dollar spent at home helps your home town. Set the dollars rolling here and they stay in this orbit. Send them off at a tangent to Los Angeles and you never see them again. They are gone forever. Patronize home merchants and help build up larger, better mercantile houses. Why? Because of the habit of purchasing in Los Angeles acquired by citizens of this town. The next time you have money to spend for dry goods, hardware, shoes, groceries, drugs, furniture, jewelry, plumbing, dentistry, etc., give your home merchant the preference.—San Fernando Press.

PATRIOTISM STILL LIVES.

In reading the history of fifty years ago dealing with the great civil war then beginning, there is nothing more inspiring than the story of the immense sums of money, raised in many cases in a few hours in various cities, offered so freely by people of all classes and nationalities in the north and by institutions and business concerns of all kinds, from the pure motive of patriotism. Rich and poor alike gave of their possessions with an abandon of generosity that indicated a love of country superior to every feeling of selfishness. And human nature has not changed in half a century. In these "piping times of peace," when the struggle for wealth is so strenuous and so general, when it appears as if it was a struggle of every one for self and none for the good of the whole, we are likely to imagine that we live in an age devoid of the spirit of patriotism and given over entirely to the scramble for wealth, place and power. But if another great crisis should arise in the history of our country, we doubt not that the people of today would respond as they did a half century ago to the call for patriotic service, ready to place upon the altar of the nation all that they possess, even life, fortune and sacred honor.

JUSTICE WILL BE DONE.

Those labor unions which are passing resolutions denouncing the officials who arrested the three alleged dynamiters and are assisting in the campaign for raising an immense sum to defend them, are making a serious mistake. If they seriously believe in the innocence of the accused, no one can object to their expressing such belief and assisting in a proper manner in securing them a fair trial. But when they declare that the whole thing is a "conspiracy," that the criminal acts have been committed by detectives in the pay of capitalists so that union labor may be discredited thereby, they draw too heavily upon the credulity of the public and simply discredit themselves. And the raising of a large sum of money for the defense is unjustifiable from any point of view. If not a dollar was provided for the accused men, they would have just as fair a trial. Lawyers would defend them without remuneration, either satisfied to obtain the notoriety that will attach to them, or actuated by a sincere sympathy for the prisoners and the cause they are supposed to represent. There is no legitimate use that a sum of money running up to probably a quarter of a million dollars can be put to in the defense of a person accused of crime. The only way in which those controlling it could hope to make it effectual, would be by bribery of judge or jury—or by working on public opinion through a venal press and thus influence and intimidate those upon whom the fate of the prisoners might depend. This was undoubtedly done with considerable success in the trial of Moyer and his associates and the effect of it no one can tell, probably not even the jurymen themselves, but certainly it did not serve the ends of justice. The three accused men will have a fair trial and it is not likely that the prosecuting officers, judge or jury will be warped from a full performance of their duty. It is not a case of capital against labor, it is simply a case of society versus organized crime, and every member of society whatever his class and position serves best his own interest when he gives his support to those who are the embodiment of the law.

OUR THEORY AGAIN.

"Brother Sherer of the Glendale News has a pet theory that a writer can produce any desired kind of poetry if he pays particular attention to what he eats. A few months ago he desired to write a skit on a political subject, so climbed a persimmon tree to partake of the luscious fruit. After eating three ripe ones he inadvertently bit into a green persimmon, with the result that he could think of no other rhyme for Lissner than the plebeian words 'kissin' her.' In exasperation and an unguarded moment he fell off the tree's limb and broke his. Brother Morgridge of the Sierra Madre News twitted him about the matter, and Sherer comes back at him with the following."

The above is from the Artesia News, and is followed by a recent article of ours "About Poetry and Things." But that is not all; the irrepressible Randall then perpetrates the following:

"After reading the above, I went out and ate three Turkish cigarettes, which resulted in the following even sheerer nonsense:

"Mary had a harem skirt.
It made the others snub her.
But every time that Mary stepped,
The 'Turks' all turned to rubber."

When we met the Artesia genius the other day, his mood seemed pensive, and to ourselves we said: "His countenance is sickled o'er with the pale cast of thought," but it seems that the diagnosis was defective in attributing the trouble to a cast of thought! Well, anyhow, we naturally like to have our theories demonstrated, and Brother Randall's devotion to scientific research is touchingly beautiful. Inspired by the success of his experiment, we partook immediately of a bean sandwich, with the following startling result:

There was a young man in Ventura
Who said to his sweetheart: "Now, you're a
Most charming young miss,
So pray give me a kiss,
And be my own little Katura!"

But she laughed him to scorn;
Said she: "Sir, I was born
Far away from this poky Ventura.
How, sir, do you rank
At the Beanville State Bank?
Show me, for I'm just from Missouri!"

RECIPROCITY AND PROTECTION.

There is no conflict between reciprocity and a protective tariff. This is made clear by President Taft's late speech and is entirely in harmony with the tariff plank of the Republican platform which declares that the measure of protection shall be the difference between the cost of a product in the country from which it comes and our own, plus a reasonable sum for profit. Speaking on the subject of the proposed treaty with Canada the president dwells upon the fact of the similarity of conditions in the two countries and shows very clearly that if the treaty is ratified there is very little probability that any American citizen will be injured by lower prices of products raised on this side of the line, as there will be no such decrease in prices. The American people are pretty generally in favor of a protective tariff and indeed the principal agitation over the subject is among the Republicans who are in favor of that principle, but believe that it is time that the schedules were revised so that some of our manufactured products which receive protection which they do not need, should no longer be made the recipients of special favor. The weakness of the cause of "Insurgency" consists in the fact that they have broken away from the regular party organization on this matter of a revision of the tariff, and yet when brought face to face with the responsibility of reducing it on any particular product which they or their constituents are directly and locally interested in, they invariably balk and refuse to be "progressives" in that particular. When the subject was up in congress two years ago, we pointed out the inconsistency of our western representatives in this matter and expressed the opinion that California would be in better shape to insist upon its valid rights in the matter of protection, if our representatives and the people generally were willing to concede something, instead of persistently fighting for protection on California products without discrimination. We still hold to this opinion. The protective tariff must be maintained as a principle; it has built up many of our industries and some of them would doubtless go down if this protection was removed—but there is nothing sacred about schedules, nor is California any more worthy of protection than are the other states of the union.

Senator John D. Works appears to be in sympathy with these views; it will be interesting to notice whether he votes his own convictions or allows his constituents of the chamber of commerce to control him.

LIBRARY NOTES.

In mentioning the list of contributions in a previous issue, an omission was made of one of the most important, namely, seven very valuable volumes by Captain J. M. Wells, an important addition to the library files well worth remembering.

GLOSSIT.

The western branch of the Glossit Company, located in Chamber of Commerce building, Tropico, Cal., have distributed samples of their goods over this and surrounding towns the past week and would ask all who have received a sample to give it a fair trial and if satisfactory ask your grocer for a supply, as he will sell it to you under a positive guarantee as printed on each box.

SHIPMENTS OF CITRUS FRUIT.

The Sparr Fruit Co. has shipped up-to-date this season out of Glendale over the Salt Lake road one hundred and ten carloads of oranges and lemons. No oranges are being packed there at present. At the Rossmoyne packing house, oranges are going out rapidly, 87 carloads of oranges having been shipped by them up to date. Their estimate of the number of cars they will make for the season is 150.

FACULTY FOR GLENDALE HIGH NEXT YEAR.

The faculty at the Glendale high school will be the same next year as it is this season, except that four additional instructors will be employed. The enrollment of the school has grown so rapidly and the need of other departments has become so urgent that the faculty must be enlarged. The domestic science department which will be added to the school at the beginning of next season, will be under the direction of Miss Vera Holloway, a graduate of Kansas State Agricultural College. Miss Holloway has, for the past year, been instructor of the domestic science department in the State Normal school in Los Angeles. R. W. Root, graduate of Berkeley, who has secured an A. M. degree from Columbia University, will, during next year teach English at Glendale high. Mr. Root has traveled extensively. For the last four years he has been principal of the high school at Newman, California.

The instructors who will be retained are George U. Moyse, principal and teacher of mathematics; Harry L. Howe, B. S., vice principal and instructor in history and athletics; C. L. Gates, commercial department; Ethel Hume Flood, A. B., Latin and German; Margret Knepper, English; Nora L. Warner, English and Latin; Bessie L. Field, A. B., History and English; Jessie A. Moore, A. B., chemistry and physics; G. F. Taylor, general science and botany; Belle N. Hall, drawing; Mrs. D. L. Gibson, music; Jane B. Hawk, algebra and physical culture for girls.

Masks of the Marquesans.

The Marquesans of a generation ago were the most completely and artistically tattooed people in the Pacific, and the practice of tattooing is carried on among them to a certain extent today. The really fine pieces of work, however, such as the famous right leg of the late Queen Vaekehu of Nukahiva, are confined entirely to the very old, and, what with wrinkles, deformities and the wear and tear of time, these have lost most of their original sharpness of color and outline. None of the new generation appears to have the fortitude to endure the exquisite pain incident to having a whole limb picked out in a lacework of geometric design or the face barred and circled like a coarse spider's web. Women are rarely tattooed at all now, and most of the young men are satisfied with a broad band of solid black, not unlike a highwayman's mask, which reaches across the face from ear to ear, giving to their never overmild looking countenances an expression of amazing ferocity.—Lewis R. Freeman in New York Tribune.

Little Boy Grizzly.

Enos A. Mills, writing of his adventures with a pet bear known as Little Boy Grizzly, says: "He and I had a few foot races, and usually, in order to give me a better chance, we ran downhill. In a 200 yard dash he usually paused three or four times and waited for me to catch up, and I was not a slow biped either. The grizzly, though apparently awkward and lumberly, is one of the most agile of beasts. I constantly marveled at Grizzly's lightness of touch or the deftness of movement of his forepaws. With but one claw touching it he could slide a coin back and forth on the floor more rapidly and lightly than I could. He would slide an eggshell swiftly along without breaking it. Yet by using one paw he would without effort overturn rocks that were heavier than himself."—Suburban Life.

Postal Clerks' Pay in Russia.

The remuneration of postal clerks in Russia includes emoluments which do not appear in the form of money. They are furnished quarters, heat and light, and in addition allowances for uniforms as well as medical attendance and medicine for themselves and their families. In cities like Moscow a large hospital is maintained for the convenience of postal clerks and carriers. Their children are admitted to the schools free of charge, which in Russia is quite an item of expense, especially in preparatory schools for colleges, to which the children of the titled and the wealthy only are admitted. The pay of clerks and carriers ranges from $12.50 to $18 per month. They may, moreover, receive gratuities from those to whom they deliver mail.

Police Methods in Berlin.

Berlin is the most strictly governed city in the world, and a stranger will be continually violating the ordinances and regulations without being conscious of his offenses. But the penalties are not severe, and the policeman who arrests you is prepared to impose the fine on the spot instead of calling a patrol wagon and taking you to the police station. You pay him a few marks, for which he gives you a receipt, and within twenty-four hours you must appear before the captain in charge of that precinct and turn in the receipt as a check upon the policeman who has arrested you.

"Do you know," inquired Wilbur Reaser, the New York portrait painter, "that when my painting of Senator Allison was hung in the lobby of the senate the precedent of forty years was broken?"

Surprise being expressed, Mr. Reaser explained:

"It is a fact that since the beginning of constitutional government the senate had bought only nine portraits for the lobby. The first was Washington's and the eighth was Charles Sumner's. For almost forty years nobody was considered worthy to follow in the distinguished line. It was generally thought that no other portrait would ever be added to the group, but when Senator Allison died, after serving longer in the senate than any other man in the history of the government, the rule was broken, and his picture became the ninth."—Washington Times.

German Bureaucracy.

A good story is going the rounds of the French newspapers illustrating the beauties of bureaucratic government in Germany. We are told that in the postoffice department if a clerk wishes a new pencil he has to hand in the stump of the one that has become too short to work with. In the particular instance cited a clerk received his new pencil without returning the end. Before the omission was discovered the clerk was transferred to another office. Just after he had commenced his duties at his new post he received an official intimation that he had neglected to hand in his pencil end. By this time it had disappeared, but to prevent bother the clerk purchased a new pencil, cut off a piece about the length of the missing bit and dispatched it to the stationery department.

Criticising Dad.

"An old man in Missouri tried to commit suicide by hanging himself with a blind bridle," said Champ Clark. "His son cut him down just in time.

"When the son cut him down and brought him to the old man complained feebly:

"'It ain't right, Henry; you've kept your old father out of heaven.'

"'You'd cut a fine figure in heaven looking through a blind bridle, wouldn't you?' retorted the son."

Deceitful Man.

"Didn't you think that was a beautiful girl with me today, Arthur?"

"What girl, my dearest?"

"Why, she was with me when you met us in front of the church."

"Was there a girl there, dear? I didn't notice. I was looking at you."

And then she loved him all the more.

She Agreed.

Spinks—What made him so mad?

Winks—He told his wife she had no judgment, and she just looked him over critically from head to foot and said she was beginning to realize it.

Handling a Haddock.

"There is no better place than a fish market to pick up queer superstitions," said a restaurant proprietor. "The other day I held up a fine specimen of haddock. The dealer, who was an Italian, nearly choked on the bunch of Neapolitan expletives that rushed into his throat.

"'Nevaire, no, nevaire take up haddock so,' he said.

"'How?' I asked.

"'By the head, so your fingers touch those dark spots on each side of the head,' he said. 'The curse fall on you if you do.'

"'Whose curse?' said I.

"'St. Petaire's,' said he. 'St. Petaire gave the haddock those dark spots. They are his finger prints. He catch haddock just so in the sea of Galilee, and every haddock born since then has shown those same marks. Let go.'

"And I did let go. Of course I did not believe it, but when I found that half the fish dealers in that market did believe I deemed it prudent to handle haddock by the body or tail."—New York Sun.

A Maniac's Poem.

Probably the mass of prison poetry which has been written on stools and bedposts and scratched on prison walls far exceeds that which has found expression on paper, and many a "mute, inglorious Milton" has begun and finished his poetical career with these "lost to sight" productions. There is in existence a short poem, said to have been scratched by a maniac on the wall of his cell, which runs thus:

Could I with ink the ocean fill,
Were all the world of parchment made,
Were every reed on earth a quill
And every man a scribe by trade,
To write the love of God alone
Would drain that ocean dry;
Nor could the scroll contain the whole,
Though stretched from sky to sky.

The authenticity of this being the work of a maniac has often been questioned because of the beauty of its expression and its sound reason, but the story stands.—London Saturday Review.

Bird Stories.

A German scientific journal published in 1897 a story to the effect that a golden eagle shot in that year at Esseg, Slavonia, was found to have a ring about its neck engraved on which were the arms of a Slavonian family and the date 1646.

In 1793 the Gentleman's Magazine told about a hawk, captured when flying in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope and taken by an Indian ship to England, which wore a gold collar inscribed:

"This goodlie hawk doth belong to his Most Excellent Majesty James, King of England, A. D. 1610."

If this bird really escaped from England in the reign of James, 183 years elapsed between its escape and its recapture, and it had flown a distance of 6,500 miles away from its former owner.

CHAPTER I.

IT was shortly after 9 o'clock when a brisk young man stepped out of a taxicab into the dim crevice of Broad street, followed by a huge negro bearing a suit case. Nestled back amid a number of alleged brokers, who dealt hilariously in such "securities" as Wireless Motor preferred, he found the offices of Henry Galleon & Co., one of the few legitimate firms which, intrenched in their own natural conservativeness, had refused to move when the curb invasion came.

"Mr. Galleon?" inquired the newcomer.

"Upon what business, please?" asked an old clerk.

"I only care to talk to Mr. Galleon himself."

The old man arose with a slight, protesting frown, asked for a card and took it into an inner room.

Henry Galleon was about the same age as his secretary, but he was erect. His face and his bald head were pink with a baby's pinkness, his white hair glistened like silk, and the brightness of his eyes was almost infantile.

"Phillip Kelvin?" he said. "Who's Phillip Kelvin? I never heard of him."

"I don't know," replied the secretary. "He's a very capable looking young man and by no means a New Yorker, I should think. He has a tremendously large negro with him, the largest one I ever saw. The negro is carrying a big suit case."

Henry Galleon pondered that matter quietly. Fanatics with bombs had menaced the Wall street district of late, and they might come in any guise.

"Find out his business, Messmer," was the sane conclusion.

"I did ask, but he insisted on seeing you personally."

Galleon frowned. "If he can't explain properly to you, let him go. You are authorized to transact all necessary business in my name."

Messmer went out with that message, though he softened it somewhat. Young Kelvin had evidently expected such an answer, for he smiled and turned to the negro.

"Here, Sam," he directed, "put the case on this desk."

Messmer frowned as the suit case was slammed upon the top of his tangle of papers, but he waited with some curiosity while young Kelvin unlocked it. Messmer was struck dumb by the surprising contents of that unpretentious bit of baggage.

"These," said young Kelvin smilingly, running his hand down in the suit case and fluttering the edges of its contents—"these are my letters of introduction. Kindly tell Mr. Galleon about them and that I will not talk to any one but himself."

"Yes, sir!" said Messmer, with surprising alacrity. "Yes, sir; yes, sir!"

He was positively white and trembling when he went back into Galleon's office.

"That suit case!" he gasped. "The young man has just opened it, and it is full to the top with nothing but money!"

"Money?" expostulated Mr. Galleon.

"Money, sir, money," repeated Messmer, "paper money, all of high denomination—solid packages of bills! He said that these were his letters of reference and that he would talk business with no one but you."

Mr. Galleon turned upon old Messmer peremptorily. "Why don't you show the young gentleman in?" he demanded.

He inspected young Kelvin sharply as Phillip came into the room and found him to be a well dressed, clean looking chap, with an extremely clear eye and an extremely healthy complexion.

"Your letters of recommendation are perfectly satisfactory, Mr. Kelvin," said the broker, smiling. "What can we do for you?"

Young Kelvin opened the suit case and took from it eight packages of bills, which he counted over carefully. "Here is $200,000," said he. "I wish you to sell for me a thousand shares each of these four stocks." He laid a slip of paper upon Mr. Galleon's desk. The broker instantly figured that the suit case must contain not less than $2,000,000 cash.

"Of course, Mr. Kelvin, it is none of my affair," he began hesitantly, "but it is positively criminal of you to be carrying that enormous amount of currency about with you. It ought to be banked."

"It is one of the strict conditions of my dealing with you that our operations are to be transacted in currency. I shall neither give nor receive checks."

"But it is dangerous," insisted Mr. Galleon.

Phillip smiled. "Ordinarily, yes," he admitted, "but in the present juncture I consider banks much more dangerous. Have you a good deposit vault?"

"I have deposit boxes in the best vaults in town."

"Then I must insist that you keep this cash under your own lock and key. Use no more than $20 per share for initial margins and hold the balance in reserve."

Galleon frowned. "There prevails at present a peculiar condition which you may not understand, Mr. Kelvin. It even puzzles old members of the street. While the market is sluggish, money is very tight, a most rare and unusual state of affairs. It would be folly to let this amount of cash lie idle when it could command such an unusual rate."

"Do you wish to handle my deals or not?" And young Kelvin's jaws came shut with a snap.

Galleon studied the matter over in silence for awhile. "How does it happen that you come to me?" he asked.

"That is very simple," replied Kelvin, with a smile. "From perfectly authentic sources I secured a list of all the board of trade members in New York who do absolutely no bucketing and no trading upon their own account, and you happened to head that list."

Henry Galleon bent forward eagerly. "How many are there?" he asked.

"Less than would have saved Sodom and Gomorrah. There are just five, and I was given a doubt concerning one of those."

Chuckling to himself, Henry Galleon began counting the money. He touched a button and there stepped energetically into the room from a rear door a young fellow of broad shoulders and bronzed face, who was the personification of cheerful good humor.

Galleon pushed forward the slip of paper which Kelvin had just given him. "Selling orders for the first thing this morning at the market," he explained.

The young man paid no attention to the slip. "Why, hello, Phill!" he exclaimed. "Where did you drop in from?"

"Tennessee," replied Kelvin. "By George, you're looking well, Rensselaer. I'm as much surprised to see you here, so far away from the mavericks and the rustlers, as you are to see me."

"Oh, I'm not in such a different occupation from cowpunching," laughed Rensselaer. "I'm Mr. Galleon's floor member over on the exchange, and it's much the same sort of exercise. Where are you stopping?"

"At the Esplanade. Come up to see me," invited Kelvin.

"I sure will!" declared Rensselaer. "Then we'll go out and see if we can't get some canned tomatoes. Do you remember how we used to go down to Abe Turner's store at Greaser Gulch and buy canned fruit and spear it out with a jackknife?"

"HE WAS CRAZY FOR POWER."

"I don't think I shall ever forget it," laughed Kelvin. "I never want to."

As soon as he had gone Galleon turned eagerly to young Rensselaer. "Who was that?" he demanded.

"Phill Kelvin. I used to know him on a Montana ranch when we were cowpunching together five or six years ago."

"Was he there for his health?" asked Galleon.

"I don't think so," replied Rensselaer, with a chuckle. "As I remember him he had too much health, if anything, but that was about all he possessed. I bunked with him for six months, and there never was a finer fellow on earth—so long as he had his own way."

"He looks like that," said Galleon, smiling.

"Only more so," returned Rensselaer. "Out there he was bullheaded about everything he started after—little things or big ones. If he once set his head to get something or to do something even the boss sidetracked."

"Huh!" grunted Galleon. "Where did he get his money?"

"I didn't know he had any," returned Rensselaer in surprise.

Galleon with his thumb fluttered the edges of the packages of money.

"He just left this here, $200,000, to margin those 4,000 shares of stock fifty points. Did you see that suit case he had? Stuffed full of greenbacks! There couldn't have been less than $2,000,000 in it!"

Rensselaer whistled, and they were both silent for a little while.

"Well," Rensselaer finally observed, "however he got it, he didn't steal it. More power to him. I hope he digs up two million more." He paused a moment and then chuckled. "Kelvin used to have some queer ideas," he went on. "He used to tell me about them, lying awake at night in camp. I could never make out just whether he really meant it or if he was doing a lot of dry kidding. My ambition at that time was to become a great general, but his loco point was that a republican form of government was bound to fail. Said he was crazy for power and that the way to get it was to secure control of all the money in the United States. With that he could do anything—overthrow the government, make himself emperor, correct all the abuses in the world. He promised me my generalship when the time came. Funny jumble of stuff, but sometimes it sounded reasonable too."

Old Henry Galleon whistled softly to himself a homely tune of long ago and tapped a pile of money with his lead pencil. "He's got hold of so much of the money he was after that he'll forget the rest of the program," he sagely observed.

Four other brokerage firms young Kelvin visited, and with each one he concluded an arrangement precisely like that entered into with Galleon, except that at each office he left a different list of stocks to be sold on a twenty point margin, backed up by $50 cash per share; then, with Sam's suit case half empty, he directed his chauffeur to drive back up Broadway to the Esplanade. Upon that marvelous thoroughfare he looked about him with the frank curiosity which marks the wondering stranger.

"Only fifteen years, Sam," he said, turning to the negro, "and see what has been done. This is the most wonderful city in the world."

"Yes, sah," replied Sam, looking briefly from the suit case between his feet and immediately concentrating his gaze upon it again.

Kelvin laughed. "Nothing so wonderful to you as that suit case, is there, Sam?"

"No, sah," agreed Sam, permitting himself a slight grin. "Ah done reckon tha's about all the money in the worl'!"

"Not quite," dissented Kelvin with a smile, then turned again to study the changes time had wrought. "It is marvelous," he presently resumed, talking more to himself than to the negro. "When I was here fifteen years ago I could not appreciate what all this meant, but now I know that this street is the concentrated nervous energy of America gone mad in the race for supremacy. I guess you didn't think you'd see anything like this, Sam, when I saved you from the mob in the Tennessee woods?"

Sam shuddered. "'Deed Ah didn't," he admitted. "Mistah Phillip, Ah'll neveh fohget that as long as Ah live. Mah life was plum' gone, boss. Ah suah would been han'led like they done the right man when they-all got 'im ef yo' hadn't come along in yo' automobile. Mah life belongs to yo' boss. Yo' kin—yo' kin kill me—jes' any time yo' git good an' ready, 'cause Ah done live now three yeahs longeh than mah time."

"They've been fairly happy years for both of us, Sam," said Phillip, "but now we really begin to live." He mused a while longer, then, going back to his original thought, added with a curious smile: "It is strange to me that, with all these advancements in science, business and politics have not advanced one whit, except along the line of their logical ends. The same antiquated methods are used that were in vogue fifty years ago. I guess that, after all, those are the two most conservative institutions in the world. Eh, Sam?"

"Yes, sah," Sam again readily agreed, whereupon Phillip laughed heartily.

CHAPTER II.

ARRIVED at Phillip's apartments in the Esplanade, Sam hurried into an inner room. Methodically he took cushions from the couch and pillows from the bed and piled them in a corner; then he sat down against them with the suit case between his knees.

Meanwhile Phillip, in the apartment which had been turned into an office for him, entered his record of the day's business on filing cards and upon a huge diagram sheet, then wrote a long and careful letter, after which he took pencil and paper from a drawer in his desk and delved into numerous books of statistics.

It was nearing 3 o'clock when a boy brought in two letters. One of them, in a heavy, cream tinted envelope and slightly fragrant, he opened and read through with a frown. A postscript at the end, however, brought a smile to his face, and he stepped into the adjoining apartment. Sam's eyes were closed, but Phillip had no sooner set foot in the room than he opened them, black and shining and as expressionless as the eyes of a huge turtle. Without moving he waited for Phillip to address him.

"Lucy hasn't forgotten you, Sam," said Phillip. Sam's eyes glistened. "She suttenly is the most mischievousest pusson Ah eveh saw in mah life," he exploded, and he ended with a shrill falsetto chuckle.

"Her mistress writes," went on Phillip, gazing at the letter again: "'Lucy is turning pale since your visit to Forest Lakes, and I think she is pining away for Sam. She asked yesterday when he was coming back. When is he?'"

Sam bent over the suit case and slapped his legs in a paroxysm of delight. "Ah suttenly is a lady killeh," said he.

Phillip, laughing, returned to his office and, tearing the letter once across, dropped it into the wastebasket with a gesture of almost contempt; then he opened the second letter, one addressed in a girl's hand, but a firm one. This, too, he read with a frown, but it was one of surprise. A ring of the telephone interrupted his musing.

"LUCY HASN'T FORGOTTEN YOU, SAM."

"Mr. Rensselaer?" he repeated into the telephone. "Send him right up."

There came a knock at the door, and he opened it to let young Rensselaer in.

"You're just in time, Bert," he declared. "What have you to do this evening?"

"Anything or nothing," replied Rensselaer. "At 3 o'clock all I want to do is get as far away from the mutton abattoir as possible and forget all about it until the next morning. But what reckless dissipation have you in mind?"

"I have some friends over in New Jersey that I am more or less obliged to see," replied Phillip, "and I thought you might sacrifice yourself enough to run over with me. I understand it's only an hour and a half if you take the tunnel. Frankly, I want to get into the subway, to smell the subway—smell, and renew, if I can, the impressions of novelty that I enjoyed in my boyhood. You see, I was only a kid he last time I was here."

"I must have seemed a wonderful place to you then," said Rensselaer. "For myself, I'd rather be a cowpuncher than anything I can think of, but my respected auntie can't conceive of me's living anywhere else than in or near Manhattan, and, moreover, she fears I might contract a misalliance out west, as she still declares my father did."

"That was his one best trick, wasn't it?" inquired Phillip.

"No doubt of it," returned the other. "I'm the first Rensselaer in a hundred years who has been able to bathe without the aid of a valet and the first one to have blood enough to gush when he was cut, and my mother—well, she was a real woman, gentle, but brave, too; sweetly feminine, but strong and healthy; tactful, but sincere and honest." His voice quavered, and he stopped.

"I wish I might have known her," said Kelvin. "That is a good country to produce real human beings."

Rensselaer turned to him quickly. "Of course I'm not going to ask you what your plans are nor how you reached your present point," he observed, "but you're doing a stunning thing if it's your aim to gain profitable conspicuousness. There hasn't been so much real money in the financial district in years. You certainly must have put in a remarkable five years. Where did you go from Montana?"

"Oh, down to Tennessee in the real estate business," said Phillip guardedly. "I managed to get in pretty good on them. I did a stroke or two down there that brought me some success and some influential friends. Now I am going to make a big play. You know a certain Wall street crowd, still in business, broke my father, and he died from it."

"I remember your telling me something about that. But be careful you don't overplay your game," warned Rensselaer, whereat Kelvin only smiled, though grimly enough.

They had reached the bottom of the hotel elevator shaft now, and they turned into the subway corridor, a convenience which impressed Kelvin very much.

"It's a bad development," stated Rensselaer, shaking his head. "There is a growing tendency toward these direct entrances both in business and in tenement districts, and it is bound to produce a race of toilers who will see no sunlight whatever. They will practically be human moles, like that errand boy yonder—undersized and undeveloped, physically, mentally and morally, white and soft and flabby, like putty. They will not be men; they will be worms."

"Sometimes the worm may turn," Phillip speculated, "and if it does watch out! When a country loses its middle class it is in a bad way. You can crush out of mankind everything, even hope, with one exception—the capacity to kill."

Rensselaer laughed. "Can you imagine anything more amusing than a fight with about fifty of those chaps?"

"I don't see the fun in it," objected Phillip. "I saw a crowd of newsboys in Chicago attack a very brawny man once, and they nearly killed him."

"I've known cowmen to fight over a milder discussion than this," laughed Rensselaer. "I guess we'd better drop it. Do you remember that famous fight between Mutton Harris and Freckles Lane over the proper way to flop a pancake?"

That started a line of reminiscences which lasted until they searched out the home of Ben White.

The Whites were strictly an installment family. They lived in an installment house, wore installment clothing, sat upon installment furniture and read installment books. As Kelvin and Rensselaer turned in at the gate a scowling collector was turning away from the door, in which stood a plump, rosy and altogether wholesome looking young woman.

"I knew you'd come!" she said, with an unmistakable ring of delight in her voice.

"Quite naturally," Phillip assured her as he shook hands with her. "Allow me to introduce Mr. Rensselaer, Miss White."

"How lucky I am!" she said eagerly as they walked up the steps. "When I read your name in the Sunday list of hotel arrivals I just felt sure that it must be our Phillip Kelvin, and I told father that I was bound to write to you and invite you to come out."

"I wondered how you found me so readily," he commented, smiling.

"It's because I'm so lonesome," she replied. "We don't make friends here as we did in Tennessee, so I am for ever and ever reading the hotel arrivals, hoping that among the names I'll find somebody we used to know." She paused a moment and laughed at herself. "But I never found one until now," she admitted, "because they don't publish the arrivals at the cheap hotels, and we never knew anybody who was likely to be able to stop at the more expensive ones. That is how I came to be sure it was you."

"I don't see why," objected Phillip. "When you knew me I was as poor as a church mouse."

"I know, but that was five years ago, and I felt sure that in five years you ought to be stopping at the Esplanade or you wouldn't be the Phillip I knew."

"That's a very pretty compliment, Phillip," said Rensselaer.

"This young lady couldn't say any other sort of thing about me if she is like she used to be," replied Phillip, placing his hand affectionately upon her shoulder. "She was one of my stanchest adherents in those days, long before she was a young lady. How old were you when I left, Elsie?"

"Fifteen," she replied.

"Five years ago," mused Phillip. "Now you are twenty."

"And you're thirty-one," she returned. "My, how old we're becoming!"

She led them into the little parlor, which opened directly from the stoop. In one corner was a music rack filled with music, and though that corner was filled with a big chair it seemed conspicuously bare. To Phillip, who knew the Whites so well, that space told its own story. The payments on the installment piano had not been kept up!

Elsie called back across the dining room to the kitchen:

"Mr. Kelvin is here, mother."

A very much faded looking woman of forty-two or forty-three came in, drying the backs of her hands with her palms.

"I'm mighty glad to see you," she said, shaking hands with him, and her tired eyes grew a trifle brighter. "My, how solid looking you've grown! Seems to me you look as if you was hunting for somebody to contrary you. You didn't use to look that way when you boarded with us—did he, Elsie?"

Kelvin turned to Elsie, and in his gaze Rensselaer thought that he read friendly admiration and nothing more. His look had not that rapt eagerness of her gaze and never would have for any woman, Rensselaer found himself deciding. He decided wrongly. Kelvin had found himself strongly drawn to Elsie, but he sternly suppressed that tendency as quickly as he recognized it in himself.

"I don't know," replied Elsie to her mother's question. "There seems to be some slight change, but to me he is just the same old Phillip, whom I'm glad to see again and hope to see often."

"I suppose you're married by this time," suggested Mrs. White.

"I have never stayed in one place long enough to get married, except in Tennessee, and there I was too busy," laughed Phillip.

"Elsie has never forgot you," Mrs. White next observed. "She thinks about you all the time, and she's been talking about you ever since we moved away."

The connection of Mrs. White's remarks was so absurdly palpable that Rensselaer could not help letting his eyes twinkle, and Elsie, catching his glance of amusement, laughed outright, whereupon the two callers joined her, very much to Mrs. White's surprise.

"You was a mighty busy young man even in that six months before we moved away," rattled on Mrs. White. "We was all sorry we had to go and leave you behind, and it nigh broke Elsie's heart. But she's kep' track of you all right. She made us take a paper from back home on purpose. First we saw that you struck oil on that cheap little two acres of ground you scraped together and bought, then you bought some coal land and built a foundry and a railroad or what not. I don't know what all you done, but Elsie can tell you every bit of it, from A to Izzard. She's"—

"Mother, did you call father in?" interrupted Elsie demurely.

"Yes, he'll be right in. He's out in the garden pottering around. You know he always was crazy about gardening, and he ain't working now."

"How are the rest of the family?" Kelvin asked.

Both Elsie and her mother looked concerned.

"Grace is married," said Mrs. White. "Ed got his spine hurt in a football game, and he's upstairs now. You must see him before you go. He always liked you so well. All three of the children did, for that matter, although none of them put a crown and a royal robe on you like Elsie did. Yes, you did, Elsie, you know you did, and you never would give any encouragement to a beau from that day to this. I'm afraid Ed's going to be an invalid all his life."

"Oh, that must be seen to," protested Phillip, shocked in spite of his embarrassment. "Perhaps a specialist could bring him out all right."

Mrs. White shrugged her shoulders despairingly. "Specialists cost money, and we ain't got it—not these times."

No Color In the Dark.

In the dark there is no such a thing as color. The reddest dress is just the same color as a pure white tablecloth when both are placed in a dark closet. If you would understand this assume the presence of a light wave motion in the ether. The color of light depends upon the length of these waves. The light waves producing the colors in the blue end of the spectrum are very short compared with those that produce the colors near the red end. The light source that we know as red gives off only waves of a length to produce that particular color. A body appears red because its surface absorbs all the other waves and reflects the red waves back into the eye. If an attempt is made to light a blue body with red light it will fail, because the blue body is capable of reflecting only the short waves producing the blue, and since the red source produces none of these there will be no reflection and the body will appear black. A thing looks black when it is capable of absorbing all the colors at once.—St. Louis Republic.

Improving the Book of Job.

I remember the relief with which, after long feeling the sway of Franklin's imperturbable common sense, I came upon a project of his for a new version of the book of Job to replace the old version, the style of which, says Franklin, has become obsolete and hence less agreeable. "I give," he continues, "a few verses which may serve as a sample of the kind of version I would recommend."

We all recollect the famous verse in our translation, "Then Satan answered the Lord and said, Doth Job fear God for naught?" Franklin makes this, "Does your majesty imagine that Job's good conduct is the effect of mere personal attachment and affection?"

I well remember how, when I first read that, I drew a deep breath of relief and said to myself, "After all, there is a stretch of humanity beyond Franklin's victorious good sense."—Matthew Arnold's "Culture and Anarchy."

An Awful Experience.

A native diver descended into the water to see whether one of the piers, then in course of construction, had set. While he was engaged in this work a great iron cylinder subsided a little, crushing his hand between it and the masonry. When, on a signal being given, another diver came down he found his unfortunate comrade imprisoned under water without hope of escape. After a few moments of mute despair and harrowing uncertainty a speechless decision was arrived at, and the newcomer proceeded with chisel and hammer to hack off his unhappy companion's hand at the wrist. The prisoner was thus liberated, but died soon after reaching the surface from the shock. Never, I think, has an opium eater in his dreams imagined a more pitiful spectacle of hopeless human suffering.—"Travels In India."

Justifiable Protest.

"My wife is one of the unluckiest persons I know," began a Cedar avenue man, who tells long stories about his household affairs.

"She sure is," agreed the victim of the conversation fervently. But his mild sarcasm was lost.

"She was hit by a street car recently," pursued the narrator, "and got a broken arm. That's the fourth time in less than a year that something has happened to her. When they brought her to her senses this time I leaned over her sympathetically. 'Better, my dear?' says I. 'It ain't fair!' she yells. 'What ain't fair?' I asks gently. 'Why,' she groans, 'you're the one that carries all the accident insurance in this family, and I'm the one that always gets hurt. It ain't fair!'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Kangaroo's Kick.

When a big "old man" kangaroo stiffens his tail and converts it into a sort of revolving pivot bearing the whole weight of his body, leaving his tremendously powerful legs free for attack and defense, everybody who does not want to be ripped up or thrown in a heap for a considerable distance will give the marsupial a wide berth. Only those who have seen the full grown kangaroo in his native Australian bush with his back to a tree, scattering dogs, bleeding and torn, right and left, can form any adequate idea of the prodigious strength the animal is capable of exerting when he finds himself in a tight corner.

The Old Man's Opinion.

Mr. Scrimpps—I asked your daughter a very important question last night, and she referred me to you.

Old Gentleman—H'm! What did you ask her?

"I asked her if she'd marry me."

"Well, she won't."

"Eh? Has she said so?"

"No, but from what I know of the girl I don't believe she would have bothered herself about me if she had really wanted you."—New York Weekly.

Tommy's Decision.

Teacher—Now, Tommy, suppose a man gave you $100 to keep for him and then died, what would you do? Would you pray for him? Tommy—No, sir, but I would pray for another like him.

Domestic Joys.

"Do you and your wife play cards much?"

"No; we have plenty of other things to quarrel over."—Detroit Free Press.

Slaves of the Russian Passport.

A peasant leaves his home to seek for work as a field laborer wherever he can find work to do, and, like every Russian, male and female, he takes his passport with him, which is quite as much a part of him as his soul is. It is always a half yearly passport, which he must renew at the end of six months, sending it home in a registered letter to an official at his native place and inclosing the legal fee and something over for the trouble. The time of renewal draws near; the workman gets a demand for a new passport. Through official neglect or other reason the passport fails to come in time. The honest workingman, who is earning his bread in the sweat of his brow and by the practice perhaps of exceptional sobriety is trying to earn a pittance for his family, is arrested suddenly and sent home—that is, is flung into a forwarding prison, whence he emerges to join a convict party, which contain the cream of criminality, and is made to suffer torments before he gets home. When he arrives he gets his passport and is a free agent—once more a loyal subject.—E. B. Lanin.

Fixing Up the Horse.

If you had a highly intelligent thoroughbred horse to which you were greatly attached, what would you do for him in order to bring him to the highest point of efficiency?

Would you teach him, at great inconvenience and after many repetitions, to smoke from ten to fifteen cigars a day, and would you mix with his oats all the way from a pint to a quart of alcohol? Would you re-enforce this by overloading his stomach with highly spiced food and add all the narcotics that were in the market, such as tea, coffee, etc.? Would you keep him in a heated stable without any fresh air, make him sit up at all hours of the night and permit all the veterinarians in the neighborhood to hold consultations and operate upon him as often as they needed the money?

And if you did all this, what sort of a race would you expect that horse to win?—Life.

Ancient Football.

Philip Stubbes wrote in 1583 in his book on "The Anatomie of Abuses:"

"For as concerning football I protest unto you it may rather be called a freendly kinde of fight than a play of recreation; a bloody and murthering practice than a felowly sporte of pastyme. For dooth not every one lye in waight for his Adverserie, seeking to overthrow him and to picke him on his nose, though it be on hard stones, so that by this meanes sometimes their necks are broken, sometimes their backs, sometimes their legs, sometimes their arms, sometimes one part thrust out of joynt, sometimes another; sometimes the noses gush out with blood, sometimes their eyes start out—fighting, brawling, contention, quarrel picking, murther, homicide and great effusion of blood, as experience dayly teacheth."

Relics of the Incas.

The Inca period has left us remarkable traces, especially in the magnificent roads. Broad, beautiful turnpikes, now only partially preserved, run for a distance of over 2,000 miles from the coast to the plateau and the foot of the highest peaks. We marvel at the skill of the Inca engineers, especially in the magnificent stairways hewn in the rock, in the filling up of deep ravines, in the paving with ponderous flags. In several places have been found the remains of a former asphalt covering to these roads. At certain intervals are found the ruins of custom houses and laid out grounds and fortifications, of which the most interesting specimen is the fortress of Cuzco, built about the year 1000, and plundered and destroyed by Pizarro in 1543.—Century Path.

The Club.

An exclusive dining society in London is the one bearing the arrogant title the Club, which since its foundation has been limited to thirty-five members. Johnson, Burke, Reynolds and Goldsmith were among the original members. Garrick and Boswell joined in 1773 and Gibbon and Fox in 1774. Of the eighteen premiers in the nineteenth century nine were members of the club, Fox, Liverpool, Canning, Russell, Aberdeen, Gladstone, Salisbury, Lord Rosebery and Mr. Balfour.—London Spectator.

The Orator's Fate.

"Some orators," said Senator Sorghum reflectively, "make me think of our parrot."

"The one whose head you chopped off?"

"Yes. He had to take all the blame for what somebody else insisted on his saying."—Washington Star.

Asking Too Much.

"My dear," said Mr. Clarkson, "I don't want you to think I have any desire to criticise you for the way you manage, but really we must try to live within our income."

"Within our income? Goodness! And be regarded by everybody in our set as eccentric?"—Judge.

Doubled Her Capacity.

"Mrs. Garber fell downstairs and bit her tongue in two."

"I feel sorry for her husband. She was a terror when she had only one tongue!"

Vice Versa.

Teacher—I would like some one in the class to define the meaning of vice versa. Bright Boy—It's sleeping with your feet toward the head of the bed.

Good deeds ring clear through heav en like a bell.—Richter.

NOTICE OF SALE OF CITY HALL AND LIBRARY SITE BONDS OF THE CITY OF GLENDALE, CALIFORNIA.

Sealed proposals will be received by the City Clerk of the City of Glendale, California, until 7:30 o'clock p. m. of Monday, May 15th, 1911, to purchase city hall and library site bonds of said City of Glendale in the amount of Eighteen Thousand ($18,000.00) Dollars. Said bonds are twenty-four year serials and are forty-eight in number, twenty-four thereof are in the denomination of Five Hundred ($500.00) Dollars each, and twenty-four thereof are in the denomination of Two Hundred and Fifty ($250.00) Dollars each, and the principal and interest thereof shall be payable in lawful money of the United States.

They shall be dated July 1st, 1911, and bear interest at the rate of five per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the first day of January and on the first day of July of every year, at the office of the City Treasurer of the City of Glendale. Said forty-eight bonds shall be payable in the manner following: One twenty fourth part of the whole amount of such indebtedness shall be paid on July 1st, 1912, and one-twenty-fourth part of the whole amount of such indebtedness each and every year thereafter.

Said bonds are issued under the authority of the act of the Legislature of the State of California entitled "An Act Authorizing the Incurring of Indebtedness by Cities, Towns and Municipal Corporations for Municipal Improvements and Regulating the Acquisition, Construction or Completion Thereof," which became a law February 25, 1901, and in accordance with the provisions of law and the ordinances of said City.

No proposals for said bonds will be entertained at less than their face value together with the accrued interest to the date of their delivery, and all bids or proposals submitted will be construed by the Board of Trustees of said City to mean par and accrued interest to the date of delivery of said bonds in addition to the premium offered, whether the bids or proposals set forth the same explicitly or not.

The said bonds will be ready for delivery on or about July 1st, 1911, and will be delivered at the City Treasurer's office in the City of Glendale, California, or at any designated place, upon the payment by the purchaser of all expenses incurred by the delivery of the bonds and transfer of the money necessary to make delivery and payment equivalent to a transaction at the office of the City Treasurer in the said City of Glendale. All bids or proposals providing for delivery at any place other than the City of Glendale, California, will be construed by the Board of Trustees to mean the price bid in addition to the expenses of delivery, whether the bid or proposal sets forth the same explicitly or not. With each proposal or bid must be submitted a certified check drawn upon some bank in the State of California, payable to the order of the City Treasurer of the City of Glendale, for the sum of Two Hundred and Fifty ($250.00) Dollars, as a guarantee that the bidder will purchase and pay for said bonds in accordance with his proposal in the event the bid is accepted. The Board of Trustees of said City reserves the right to reject any and all bids or proposals.

By order of the Board of Trustees of the City of Glendale, made at a regular meeting of said Board. April 24th, 1911.

Parker and Sternberg took to Van Nuys last Saturday on an auto ride a party of gentlemen among whom were Wilmot Parcher and Messrs Jackson, Spencer and Dalrymple. Mr Jackson is a visitor from Minnesota. Mr. Dalrymple comes from Colorado. The visitors were greatly pleased with the appearance of the ranch and noted with surprise the many evidences of development made since the first of the year.

Mr. W. S. Sloan and family of 1331 West Seventh street, Glendale, have recently entertained at different dates a number of their eastern and northern friends, the most prominent of whom were Mrs. W. W. Montelius, son and daughter of Vancouver, B. C., Mr. W. S. Carter of Boston, Mass., and ex-Mayor T. S. Murray and wife of Denver, Col. Mr. W. W. Montelius and son are the proprietors of the largest music house in British Columbia. Mr. Carter is a leading manufacturer in New England. Mr. T. S. Murray is a prominent attorney of Denver. All these visitors were perfectly charmed with Glendale and her picturesque surroundings.

The principal of a village school in Kansas one afternoon detected a boy cutting the letters of his name in the desk in front of him. As the novels would put it the principal rushed to the spot, angrily put forth his hand intending to grasp the boy by the collar, when lo, and also behold, close by the newly formed letters were the initials of the principal's own name written by himself when he was a pupil in the same school. His grasp upon the boy's collar loosened itself, and he returned to his desk a sadder and a wiser teacher. That principal is today judge of an important court in one of the greatest cities of the world. We often wonder whether or not in the administration of justice the judge ever thinks of the incident in the village school.—Western School Journal.

Parental Tactics.

A worried parent is sometimes obliged to do something like this:

"I'a, what is a transcendentalist?"

"Have you chained up the dog as I told you?"

"Not yet, pa."

"Well, do that, and when you come back I will tell you what a transcendentalist is."

While Bobby was gone his astute parent dug the needed information out of a dictionary.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Beethoven's Fits of Rage.

Beethoven's behavior was often atrocious. In giving lessons to young ladies he would sometimes tear the music to pieces and scatter it about the floor or even smash the furniture. Once when playing in company there was some interruption. "I play no longer for such hogs!" he cried and left the piano. He once called Prince Lobkowitz an ass because a bassoon player happened to be absent.—Dole's "Famous Composers."

Queer Human Nature.

"Man's a funny proposition!"

"What now?"

"When he reads a medical book he fancies he has every disease described, but let him read the work of a moralist and all the faults pointed out he sees not in himself, but in his neighbor."—Boston Transcript.

Stunted Maples.

Stunted maple trees, grown in mountainous regions of eastern Austria, where the winters are long and severe and the snowfalls considerable, yield excellent wood for the manufacture of violins.

A unique party was given by Mrs. J. H. Seaman to Master Edward Chandler Weston at her home on Central avenue on April 26th. This was the first birthday anniversary of Master Weston and he appeared to have the time of his life with all his little friends gathered around him in genuine baby fashion. Many novel things were arranged that would tend to cause the little ones to overlook entirely their usual hours of vocal practice, and as a result all that could be heard was a purring or cooing sound and occasionally a tiny carefree laugh. ## LOS ANGELES THEATRES

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER.

"Youth is the spirit of the theater," says a noted critic, and in the case of "Wan o' the Wood," the delightful fantasy of childhood and its dreams produced at the Majestic, a little more than a week ago, youth seems to have been incarnate, for the production was a success beyond the dreams of any of its adult promoters.

"Wan" is a play of the childhood belief in fairies, by Florence Willard, seventeen-year-old Los Angeles girl. It was produced by Frank C. Egan, director of the Egan Dramatic School, which in its various departments occupies the entire top floor of the Majestic theater building. Mr. Egan, utilizing the eager services of some of the small folk in his own school, rehearsed the piece for two months, costumed it elegantly, had special scenery built for it, engaged an orchestra, and was aided in his enterprises by several of the most prominent musical and theatrical people of the city, who, indeed, are members of his faculty. He announced a single performance. At the advice of friends he added one more performance, and both were complete "sell-outs."

By requests of hundreds of people who did not see "Wan," it is to be repeated on Saturday afternoon, May 13, and popular prices, 25c and 50c, are to be charged.

The same effective cast, including Helen Eddy in her extraordinary rendition of the title part, Lucille Hutton as Tioma, Laurie Johnson as the Indian Mother, Anna Jacsek as the fairy queen and Curtyne England as premier danseuse.

"The most idyllic stage representation since 'Peter Pan,'" said one enthusiastic Los Angeles critic.

"Wan o' the Wood" is in four complete acts, with twelve original musical numbers by Mary Payson, a noted composer who has come west especially to see the premier of the work.

"Wan o' the Wood" is being considered by eastern managers for a big New York and Chicago production next fall.

BURBANK.

"Paid in Full," the strikingly realistic drama of modern American life, has repeated its triumph of last year at the Burbank, and has been attracting crowded houses so consistently that it will be continued for the week beginning with the matinee Sunday. The second week will be the last, however, as there are other plans for the Burbank which will positively prevent a third week of "Paid in Full." It is hardly likely that the piece will be revived again, moreover, as Manager Morosco has so many new plays waiting for their turn, so this will be the last opportunity of seeing Eugene Walter's great play done by a stock company. The production has been met everywhere with the same high praise that greeted last year's presentation. Frank Camp's study of Joe Brooks has been worked out with a keen sense of the values in the contrast between the snarling misanthrope of the first act with the whipped and humiliated Brooks of the close of the play. David Landau's Jimsy is one of the Burbank classics. David M. Hartford as the gruff captain gives a gripping picture of a man who, behind his forbidding exterior, is thinking out something very differnt from the impression conveyed by his words. Ida Adair as Emma Brooks displays the mature art which characterizes all her work. Florence Oberle, Suzanne Willa and Charles Ruggles complete the cast. Robert Brunton's scenic equipment is artistic and picturesque, especially the setting for the sea-captain's "cabin," which bears a close resemblance to an old curiosity shop with its collection of queer articles from all corners of the world.

What is Alcohol? Questions and Answers.

Is alcohol a food? A. No. Because it contains no nitrogen, being composed of carbon two parts, hydrogen six parts and oxygen one part, or as a chemist would write it, $C_2H_6O$.

Q. Is alcohol a bone former? A. No. It cannot build up bones, hair or teeth because it contains no salts or mineral matters, nor does it help to keep the blood healthy.

Q. Is alcohol a water food? A. No. Instead of contributing to the water supply needed for the body it robs the body of water. Its fondness for water is so great that it absorbs moisture, increases thirst, and creates a craving for itself.

Q. Is alcohol a heat giver? A. No. Alcohol is a heat lowerer and makes the body really colder. Experiments have shown that it decreases the temperature of the body from one-half to two degrees, and consequently we are less able to stand cold if we take alcohol.

Q. Can you give any authority for the statement that alcohol is not a food? A. Professor Miller says: "Alcohol is in no sense of the term a food." It is not a heat giver, nor a flesh former, not a bone former, nor a water food. It is always a poison and acts on the body as a poison.

Q. If strong drink is analyzed, of what are the separate parts composed? A. If we take ale, for instance, and divide it into 100 parts, we get half part of flesh-forming material, one-fifth part bone forming, half part heat-giving, 86 parts water, seven parts poison and six parts of refuse.

Q. But we take brandy, what does the analysis show us? A. Brandy is if possible worse. We get no parts flesh-forming material, no parts bone-forming, no parts heat giving, 52 parts water and 48 parts poison.

Q. About how much food does a healthy man require per day. A. It is generally recognized that an adult man requires about 4½ ounces of flesh-forming food each day, 17½ ounces of heat giving food, and one ounce mineral matter and salts.

Q. How much would a person have to drink to get this amount of nourishment from ale? A. Only about forty quarts, or in other words, ten gallons, and by the time he had drunk that amount he would feel uncomfortable.

AT THE ODD FELLOWS PICNIC.

A party of about fifty Odd Fellows from Glendale and vicinity were furnished a special car and went to Santa Monica on Wednesday of last week to attend the 92d anniversary of the order at that pleasant resort. They witnessed the parade which had 5000 Odd Fellows in line and enjoyed the exhibition given by the Rebekahs who gave at the pavilion one of the best drills ever seen on the coast. Free coffee was furnished by the committee and visitors carried lunches. The car was held until after the dances in the evening, leaving after eleven o'clock, bringing the Glendale folks home at the end of a long and enjoyable day.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Donecken, of Glendale avenue, left last Saturday for Coronado Beach, stopping a few days at Arrowhead Springs. They expect to remain two weeks.
